SYNOPSIS

The aim of this dissertation is to examine the Government Housing policies and legislation mainly since the 1940s and after an evaluation of them to put forward proposals and recommendations that might lead to a solution of the housing problem especially in the urban sector.

This dissertation is in four parts: the magnitude of the problem; review of existing policies, legislation and the institutional framework; critical evaluation of the policies and the legislation; and proposals and recommendations. The body of the dissertation is divided into six chapters.

Chapter 1 identifies the problem of housing in Sri Lanka with special reference to the urban sector. It briefly traces how the problem started with the Second World War and it analyses quantitatively the housing needs in 1971. It goes on further to deal with the age and condition of the urban housing stock, its structural composition, the urban tenure pattern, housing amenities and the relation between rents and household income. It also has a section dealing with the housing situation in Colombo with special focus on the tenements, slums and shanties.

Chapter 2 deals with the Government's policies on housing. It points out the necessity of the State to intervene to solve the housing problem especially that of the lower income group. The Chapter starts with the Government's concern over the health of the people as well as over the predicament of tenants. It goes on to deal how with the establishment of the National Housing Fund and the institution of the National Housing Department, the Government became directly involved in the provision of housing through the granting of housing loans and by the direct construction of houses. This Chapter shows that in 1970, as a manifestation of its socialist policies, the coalition Government enacted various pieces of legislation with the intention of equitable distribution in the housing sector. A summary of Government policies concludes this Chapter.

Selected pieces of legislation are summarised in Chapter 3. It covers the evolution of rent control in Sri Lanka, from 1942 and a comprehensive survey is made of the 1972 Rent Act. The other legislation summarised in this Chapter are the Ceiling on House Property Law, the Apartment Ownership Law, the Common Amenities Board Law, the Housing Developers (Special Provisions) Law, the Protection of Tenants (Special Provisions) Act, the Local Authorities Housing Act, the National Housing Act, and the Colombo District (Low-Lying Areas) Reclamation and Development Board Act. In all these laws only the main provisions are summarised.

Chapter 4 deals with the institutional and administrative framework. It is pointed out that the main institutions that administer most of the provisions of housing legislation are the local authorities and the National Housing Department. The Common Amenities Board, the Building Materials Corporation, and the Town and Country Planning Department are some of the other institutions discussed in this Chapter.

A critical evaluation of Government policies and legislation in the field of housing is attempted in Chapter 5. Sections of certain legislation are analysed and sometimes dissected arriving at a result which proves the naivety of some of the provisions in the legislation. A major part of this Chapter is devoted to an evaluation of the rent laws. In-depth analyses and evaluations are also made of the Ceiling on House Property Law, the Housing Developers Law, and, the Government's policy of housing the lower income earners in high-rise flats.

After an examination of how much of the Government's goals and objectives are achieved (or rather not achieved), the Final Chapter spells out the various proposals and recommendations regarding a positive approach for the alleviation of the housing problem in Sri Lanka. This Chapter concludes with a list of the proposals and recommendations.

I also appreciate the assistance given to me by people such as Dr. H.E. Joubin, Planning Engineer, Department of National Housing, Mr. K. Satharajah, Chartered Valuer, and Dr. S. Anura and Mr. K. Thambiah of the Ministry of Housing and Construction, who spent some of their valuable time in having discussions and answering my various questions. My thanks also go to various officials of all Government Departments and Institutions related to planning and housing and especially those of the Colombo Master Plan Project, the Town and Country Planning Department, the Department of Census and Statistics, the Department of National Housing and the Department of National Archives, and also to those of Katholika University, University of Sri Lanka.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am indebted to a number of people who have helped me to successfully carry out this dissertation. At the very outset itself, mention must be made of Prof. N. Gunaratne, Head of the Department of Town and Country Planning, Katubedda Campus, University of Sri Lanka. I owe much more than I can express to Mr. Michael A. Slingsby, Director of Post-graduate Studies and Senior Lecturer who initially introduced me to the most interesting field of housing and who gave me the necessary guidance and advice throughout the whole of this study; and, without whose encouragement and suggestions this dissertation would not have been possible. My sincere thanks are also due to Mr. M.W.J.G. Mendis, Senior Lecturer in Town and Country Planning, who helped me with background reading material both published and unpublished.

I also appreciate the assistance given to me by people such as Dr. M.E. Joachim, Planning Engineer, Department of National Housing, Mr. M. Nadarajah, Chartered Valuer, and Dr. S. Ganesan and Mr. K.Tissera of the Ministry of Housing and Construction, who spent much of their valuable time in having discussions and answering my various questions. My thanks also go to various officials of all Government Departments and institutions related to planning and housing and especially those of the Colombo Master Plan Project, the Town and Country Planning Department, the Department of Census and Statistics, the Department of National Housing and the Department of National Archives, and also to those of Katubedda Campus, University of Sri Lanka.

It is with great appreciation, I record my indebtedness to my wife, Suvinitha and my three children for their tolerance as well as for 'leaving me to myself' all the time I was busy with this study.

Finally my thanks are due to Miss Premila Gomes who accomplished the most difficult task of beautifully typing this dissertation.
